Share this story The market for secure messaging has become so crowded that it's hard to tell one provider from another.. That's why a new Swiss startup called Wire that its end-to-end encrypted messaging app (also called Wire) would now include secure video calling as well.. Has struggled so far to come anywhere close to other widely-used messaging apps like WhatsApp or Facebook Messenger.

In its marketing materials, Wire 'offers itself as an alternative to other companies who seek to monetise users through the sale of customer data.. Facebook-owned WhatsApp announced yesterday that it had begun rolling out video calling to the more than one billion users it claims across iOS, Android and Windows Phone platforms around the world.. The company did not immediately answer Ars' questions about how many users have installed it.

According to TechCrunch, video calls on WhatsApp are end-to-end encrypted just like with FaceTime in order to prevent rogue parties from eavesdropping on your communications.. ' The app is entirely free to use across all platforms The open-source app was launched over a year ago on OS X, Windows, iOS, and Android. Openvpn For Mac Download
